A facile and novel approach has been developed to fabricate high-quality fluorescent carbon dots (CDs), which are achieved by introducing soluble g-C3N4 to synthesize CuAAC using Cd2+ as the multimerization-alliteration. The extracted CDs show a good quantum yield of 18.4%, indicating their potential in applications of fluorescence-based sensing. As shown in the experiments, the CDs can be used for detecting Cu2+ with a detection limit of 3.46×10-9 M and a high selectivity to Cu2+ against other metal ions, including Fe3+, Cd2+, Zn2+, Pb2+ and Hg2+. The experimental results demonstrate the potential application of the synthesized CDs in the detection of Cu2+.Q: How to include Standard MessageBodyWriter?
