Category:Utilities for Windows GWX Stopper Website: Category:Utilities for Windows GWX Stopper Download Link: Category:Utilities for WindowsQ: Match sub-arrays of strings, but only if one of them doesn't match Say I have an array a, which might look like this: >a a [1] "earth" "Mars" "sun" "moist" "pizza" "earth" "sun" "moist" "pizza" "Mars" I want to match each of the sub-arrays within a, which have two common substrings (in this case, "earth" and "moist"), but only if one of those sub-arrays does not have those two strings. So I'd want something to return the following: [1] "moist" "pizza" or [1] "pizza" For the sake of simplicity in my example, I've used the strings earth and moist, but I want to use whatever the strings are in my real data. I'm thinking that the key is to match each sub-array that has the string "earth" and "moist", and if it doesn't, then to only return the sub-array that doesn't have those two strings. I've been able to get something close to this by taking each sub-array and using grepl and then concatenating the results with a comma, but it's messy and inefficient. Here's what I have that's not working: >f if (length(x) > 1) { > return(x) > } else { > lapply(x, function(x) { > if (!grepl("earth",x, fixed = TRUE)) { > if (!grepl("moist",x, fixed = TRUE)) { >
