The present invention relates to wrenches, specifically, to wrenches which can be stored in a collapsed position on the top of a wrench handle and which can be extended upwardly through an opening in the top of the handle to a substantially vertical orientation. There are a number of prior wrenches which have been constructed in the aforementioned manner. However, the prior wrenches have lacked any means for preventing them from engaging any downward pressure on the pivot element which allows the pivoting and extension of the wrench upwardly through the handle opening. Atypical Ewing's sarcoma of the proximal tibia: a case report. A case of primary malignant bone tumor of the proximal tibia in a 51-year-old woman, which was found incidentally as a mass in the leg, was examined with special reference to the histopathological diagnosis. Light microscopically, on both HE and PAS-PAP staining, the tumor cells were usually of a small uniform size, with abundant intracellular, fine, vesicular cytoplasm, and round or oval vesicular nuclei, which were stippled. Large tumor cells were not observed. The tumor had a highly cellular band-like growth pattern, and frequently penetrated the cortical bone. In electron microscopy, tumor cells showed mainly neurosecretory granules in the cytoplasm, but had fine, clear granules. This is the first report of a case of atypical Ewing's sarcoma of the proximal tibia, in which light microscopical findings were characterized as small-cell carcinoma, which usually appears as an undifferentiated sarcoma.
