Choroid plexus carcinoma and endodermal sinus tumour of the ethmoid sinus: a case report. A 55-year-old man was admitted to our hospital with occipitofrontal headache, dizziness, double vision and right ptosis. There was no visual symptom. No definite abnormal laboratory data and radiological findings were observed. Computed tomography (CT) and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) revealed a tumour extending from the right frontobasal sinus to the cerebral convex. Pathological examination showed a choroid plexus carcinoma (CPC) and endodermal sinus tumour (EST), both components of the mixed tumour. A review of the literature revealed that the CPC is rarely found in the cerebral convex.The principal learning objective of the Human Genome Mapping Project (HGMP) is the construction of a physical map of human chromosomes, consisting of ordered DNA restriction fragments, which will be distributed across the entire genome. The distribution of the fragments will define overlapping contigs of genetic material, called BACs (Bacterial Artificial Chromosomes). The initial release of the ordered DNA fragments will be made available to the community through international collaborations with leading DNA-sequencing centers, such as the Wellcome Trust Sanger Centre, the Baylor Human Genome Sequencing Center (Baylor), the Children's Hospital Genome Sequencing Center (CHGSC), and the Human Genome Center at the University of Washington. The distributed physical map will be used to build a physical map of the entire human genome, which will consist of a series of clones linked together through hybridization to individual BACs. The ends of the clones will be tagged so that the sequence of the clones can be determined, thus revealing the sequence of the entire genome. The final goal is to have a "finished" physical map of the human genome, available to the entire scientific community, as soon as possible, in order to serve as the "base" for the complete sequencing of the genome. This project will provide a valuable resource to the world scientific community and will be instrumental to the understanding and treatment of human genetic disorders. The Pen Tool lets you draw on an image. You can create a vector pen or paint with various color schemes. The eraser tool allows you to erase elements of an image by selecting a brush or using the Magic Eraser tool. The Blur tool makes images appear more blurred. The Filter tool lets you apply various graphics and filters, effects or tone maps to an image. The Resize tool lets you change an image's size without distorting or cropping it. This is useful for resizing an image to fit a design, for example. The marquee tool allows you to select an area of an image and either add or subtract pixels. The Channels palette lets you see different layers of a photo on separate layers and lets you change their blending modes. The Adjustment Layers dialog is where you can find some settings for your image's basic colors. The Shadows and Highlights tools let you view an image's shadows and highlights. You can either edit the highlights and shadows directly or use the Adjustment Layers dialog to change the colors in the different layers that make up the image. The Refine Edge tool is designed to make images look better by sharpening or smoothing sections of the edges of an image, removing blemishes and even erasing objects. To work with the background layer, use the Background to Image dialog. It allows you to enter a filename, choose which layers to include and even change the image type. The Merge Layers dialog is where you can choose the layers you want to combine. You can use this to make a selection and create a mask to paint with. The Layer Group dialog lets you join layers together. To use this, select the Layers palette, click on the group button and choose where to place the layers you want to combine. The Move tool lets you drag and drop images. You can use the box tool to resize a layer and move it around. The Rectangular marquee tool lets you select a section of an image by using the rectangles you draw. The Direct Selection tool lets you make selected areas of your image behave like layers. To use it, select the tool from the Tools palette and drag in to a different area of the image. The Fill tool lets you paint on your image, making it match a color. You can either change an object's color or add a color in a specific area of an image. To work with the canvas, use the Canvas Size dialog box. It lets you change the dimensions of
