Abstract Autosomal recessive polycystic kidney disease (ARPKD) is due to mutations in the polycystic kidney disease 1 gene (PKD1). Recent studies have suggested that single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in the intronic enhancer 5' to PKD1 may impact its transcription. Here we demonstrate that a SNP (rs1156755; G>T) in the PKD1 5' intronic enhancer that is associated with ARPKD is correlated with significant effects on PKD1 expression. We show that the G>T SNP alters the binding of the transcription factor myocyte enhancer factor 2C (MEF2C) to the PKD1 enhancer and that this has an impact on PKD1 promoter activity. Since the PKD1 5' intronic enhancer lacks the HNF6 transcription factor binding motif recognized by other polycystic kidney disease associated mutations, our data suggest that alterations in the expression of PKD1 may be dependent on the types of mutations. I really enjoyed reading your post, and it really helped me understand the concepts, topics, and details that you mentioned. I found your writing to be sound, well-informed, and easy to understand. Thank you for the hard work and dedication you put into your blog. Determination of alpha-hydroxyglutaric acid. Alpha-hydroxyglutaric acid (AHGA) is a marker for the leukodystrophy, glutaric aciduria type II, and glutaric aciduria type III. Since a rapid and simple method for the determination of this compound in urine is desirable, a method was developed which involves separation of the aldehyde, reduction to the alcohol, and derivatization of the resulting carboxylic acid to a tert-butylloxycarbonyl derivative using 1-(9-fluorenyl)methoxycarbonyl chloride (Fmoc-Cl). The tert-butylloxycarbonyl ester is then cleaved with hydrogen bromide in methanol to produce the free acid, which is then extracted into ethyl acetate, and quantitated spectrophotometrically. The sample does not require prior concentration. The method was validated by spiking prepared urine samples with known 3e33713323
