This is the easiest way for you to Download Summer Heat Beach Volleyball.Q: How to upload specific file extension on an http web service with spring integration? I have a spring web service that accept files and encode them. The service does accept requests and encode other type of files. However, I want to restrict the accept path to a specific file extension. Such as *.zip. For instance, say the encoded file will be encoded.zip. When someone would like to send an encoded.zip file, I want to be able to restrict the accept path to *.zip such that it won't accept anything but encoded.zip. How can I achieve this using a filter? I am currently using spring integration to process the file and post it on the service, but I want to avoid using a custom filter. A: You have two options - using a byte-based filter to pass on the file, or move the fact of the incoming file having a specific extension to the service level by checking the name of the file on the service side. If you have the file name already on the service side then it should be trivial to do a case-insensitive comparison of the extension. { 3e33713323
