World Trade Center site was hit with a mixed set of results Wednesday, with the 9/11 Memorial and National September 11 Memorial & Museum gaining a few acres to memorialize the 2,753 victims of the attacks and another few acres to extend a post-9/11 National Mall memorial to all those who died in the violence. But the outline for an overall memorial to those who were killed by al-Qaida in the attacks at the twin towers of the World Trade Center was voted down by the National Park Service. The 9/11 Memorial and Museum, which was overwhelmingly approved by Congress in its original 2001 authorization, will gain 4 acres of park land and another 10 acres of park land are being added to accommodate a memorial to all the victims of the attacks. The 8.3-acre World Trade Center site was opened to the public for the first time in two years. All told, it is losing more than half of its overall original size. The site will begin seeing any new visitors in the spring, National Park Service officials said.Q: Effect of pH on ATP hydrolysis in skeletal muscle

While discussing ATP hydrolysis with my biology professor I asked her if a pH gradient would affect it. She said that it wouldn't as the enzyme is well protected and it's not going to change the pH. My question is if this is true, how would it then be prevented from actually reacting? A: The ATPase activity of myosin is activated when there is a gradient of free Ca. The steady state activity is partly due to Ca-activated Mg-ATPase activity which functions in the absence of Ca (Ca-independent ATPase activity).

This free Ca is due to the gradient in free Ca across the cell
