This version of the CRT on Windows 7 SP1 contains the Unicode functions and CRT DLL. It is also known as the Universal C Runtime (UCRT). Note that the CRT is not included in most installation media of Microsoft Windows, i.e. not a standalone executable (see here). Q: How can I stop the C compiler from optimizing away my constant (from a declaration in a constant expression) Say I have a file foo.c that contains: int x; const int CONST = 0; And there is a corresponding.h file foo.h that contains: const int CONST = 0; int x; This.c file will be compiled with gcc -c foo.c -o foo.o, then the.o is then linked against the corresponding.a files for the library. If the compiler knows that CONST is a constant in the program, it will not inline its declaration into the.c file, resulting in a binary of size 4 bytes (even though it is actually a symbolic constant). But if the compiler doesn't know that CONST is a constant, then
