Did you install or update Photoshop with the ArcSoft software? Is the National Center for Transgender Equality living up to its name? The National Center for Transgender Equality(NCTE) is an advocacy and social service organization that says it is "dedicated to achieving legal and social equality for transgender Americans." But at the center of that mission is an impressive building on West 14th Street in the heart of Greenwich Village that the organization is a part of. As we entered the lobby of the center we were offered brochures, but the brochure was missing any description of the work the NCTE does to advance the rights of transgender people. The brochure also had large photographs of transgender men and women in drag as part of the annual march and the Independent Fashion Market. In the days since we've been here, we've been repeatedly told that the NCTE is a "social service" organization that is "dedicated to achieving legal and social equality for transgender Americans." But less than a week ago, they posted this video clip with another statement on their website: "The Center is non-partisan, pro-equality organization based in the United States. The Center rejects any agenda or viewpoint that encourages discrimination or violence, and advocates for a broad view of gender identity law and policy." So, is the NCTE an organization that is non-partisan and pro-equality for transgender Americans? It didn't seem to be a difficult question for their Executive Director Mara Keisling: If only that were true, if only they would describe themselves as "non-partisan and pro-equality." But when we called the center for comment, a woman named Nicole Corchiani, who is in charge of public relations, said: "You can't be both. You can't be the engine of social change, and a vehicle for non-partisan politics." What would be more appropriate would be a group that was completely apolitical, completely non-partisan, and completely about rights and full equality.
