This report reviews the state of primary care in 10 states, emphasizing the role of health maintenance organizations in delivery and payment systems. During the past decade, primary care has changed dramatically. Secondary care facilities have scaled down and become less costly. More and more physicians have established group practices, and managed-care organizations such as health maintenance organizations have begun as a partial replacement for fee-for-service. In 10 states, the demand for primary care increased by more than 100 percent between 1990 and 1995. During that period, primary care in 10 states grew twice as fast as overall health care growth; in 9 states, it grew more rapidly than spending in the hospital sector. The size of new practices grew by an average of 34 percent between 1990 and 1995. By 1995, 35 percent of the new physicians established their practices as independent contractors, compared to 23 percent in 1990. Physicians have used managed care to control costs. In 1994, managed care organizations' share of
