Pressing the Alt key to paint with a clone of the brush style. Brushes are available in a variety of shapes, sizes and styles. Photoshop provides a variety of brush style options. You can change from point to curve, variation, healing brush, burn, blur, darken, multiply, screen, size, stroke, and watercolor. You can control the size, amount, shape and location of brush strokes. Many effects are possible with different brush styles. You can erase, enhance, and modify areas of an image. Since each brush has different characteristics, such as stroke distance and amount, you can create a variety of styles. For example, a style could allow you to place a small stroke or a large stroke using the size tool. The brush stroke can vary from a series of sharp, short strokes to long, rounded strokes. The strokes are usually smooth or have a pulsing motion and can fade away. Most of the brush options are controlled in the same way. Click the Brush tool in the tools panel. An options bar is displayed above the canvas. To choose a brush, you may use the keyboard or the mouse. The following steps explain how to use each method: - _To use a keyboard shortcut, press Command (Windows) or Ctrl (Mac OS). - Use the mouse.

Note: The Shift key can be used with the mouse to copy a brush. - Pressing the Ctrl key while moving the mouse acts like a stamp tool. - Click a brush style with the mouse to use it. - Press Shift to change the color of the current brush stroke. - Click another brush style to

What's New In?

Editor's note: The following was written and published by our partner network on April 4th, 2010. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences handed out its top five films in Tuesday night's Oscar race to best picture. There were some pre-race predictions that the race wouldn't be close. Well, it wasn't. The race wasn't really that close either. Two films are going home empty handed and both of them were widely expected to win. Overall, the critics seem to have a better sense of the race than the masses. The major surprise of the night came when zero movie pundits picked up "The King's Speech," for which the win was all but a forgone conclusion. Even the actors themselves failed to pick the film up with the Oscars. On a personal note, it's quite surreal to find myself here in those big white wings. I've been watching, loving, and advocating cinema for decades and yet now that the Oscars are over, I just wish I could stop... But I can't, so I guess it's back to the real world. Enough of me! Let's get to the films. "The King's Speech" Damn. I haven't seen this one since the Criterion DVD and I loved it then. This one really makes me mad. First of all, the type of censorship I don't think this country should be debating at all – but that's a whole separate can of worms. What really pissed me off this week is how Hollywood went out of it's way to put a dent in this film without calling it censorship. They called it heightening the "message of what this movie was saying."

Ridiculous. By censoring the original language to paraphrase, you kill the integrity of the film. There are whole paragraphs in the script that seem like they are from the actual diary and the paraphrase ruins the integrity of these words. The worst part was that the censors castigated this film for "naming names." What the hell?? If you quote someone and misquote them and their quote isn't offensive, just quote the damn thing! What's wrong with you people?? Ben Affleck. I'
