AutoCAD contains an XML export format called DXF-Rep, which is used for describing objects and rendering information. It can be exported from the program. It can also be imported into a program using a file import wizard. This format is also used in many of the third-party applications. The Autodesk Alias system allows people to share drawings and collaborate on workspaces. AutoCAD does not have a parallel computing system. AutoCAD does, however, support external tools like the SAP LMS system to allow it to be used for parallel processing. The autocad plugin for Sketchup is also available on Autodesk Exchange Apps. File formats There are two main file formats used in AutoCAD:.dwg (DWG) and.dxf. DWG is an AutoCAD standard file format used to exchange documentation and data. DWG files contain 2D and 3D drawings and text..dwg files can be drawn, edited, and converted to other file formats..dwg files contain DWG information about the file..dwg files can be imported into AutoCAD. AutoCAD does not read or write to DWG files. If a file has no DWG information, it is not usable in AutoCAD. AutoCAD saves any file format that it can import to DWG..dwg files can be converted to.dxf files using the Export DWG command. .dxf is a file format produced by the Autodesk CAD team. .dxf files contain more detailed information about the file than does a.dwg file. The.dwg file contains information about the file and the location of the.dwg file. The.dxf file contains information about the model and the location of the.dxf file. Autodesk will not release the.dxf file format; however, in 2002, a committee was formed to standardize the.dxf file format. This standardization would make it possible for CAD programs to exchange data with each other without writing custom interfaces. In 2009, the work that had begun to establish the.dxf file format was completed, and it was released. Today, the.dxf file is more than just a standard file format. It has become the de facto standard file format for communication between CAD applications. Because AutoCAD uses ca3bfb1094
