So, you want to get back into teaching but you don't quite know where to start. Before you begin you need to ask yourself a few simple questions. These include:

- The level of your qualifications. How much teaching experience do you have? How much on-the-job training are you willing to have? Can you work one-day-a-week? The choice of school or college will depend on your level of experience.

However, the main point to think about is the way you want to teach. Every university has options for you to teach. They may not be the same as the system you taught in before or if you taught for a private school or college before. But, there are a few basic things that you will need to consider:

- Age – how old are you, and do you intend to teach indefinitely. If not, what is your retirement date?
- Location – what is your location? Are you moving to a new state/country? A teaching lifestyle is not as easy as you may think. You can only have a set amount of hours in the week and an income that may not stretch to a lifestyle in the areas you are planning to live in. If you think that you would like to teach then you should start thinking about the area that you are going to live in. Do you want to live somewhere urban or live in the country? If you want to live in the country, then there are few options. You can either move to a larger city with schools or you can become a teacher in a private school. Do you have a car? If so, how will you make your commute to school? If you don't have a car, then you may have to rely on public transport or walking. Do you want to learn more about teaching? To find out more about teaching and if you are qualified. Another way you can find out more about teaching would be to go to a local school and speak to the principal of the school and

I also have some iPhone 3GS devices. The main question is: Is it possible to test the game on iOS 4.0 devices and the iPhone 3GS? If so, how could I do it? A: The answer seems to be yes, see this question: iOS4 support in iPhone 3GS games Q: What's the point of a function returning value when it isn't used anywhere? I was looking for a way to return a common value if no value is returned by a test and found this stackoverflow question. Here's what I wrote: private static function testFunction() { $valid = false; /* Some test code */ return $valid; } As I was writing this I kept asking myself, "Why return something I never use anywhere?" It seems kind of pointless. So why is it good programming practice to return something that is not used? A: The reason is that the function will be called from another function. It will return FALSE. The other code will assume FALSE is a valid return value and so, if you don't use the return value, it won't get the expected result. function Test() { if(! TestFunction()) $this->

I was sitting on the floor in his room in this position for three or four minutes last night before I could get a decent photo. I had no idea he would be holding a Christmas ornament in his hand. I just knew he wanted to be holding something and playing with it. I didn't realize he was holding a decoupage ornament while playing with an ornament.) The summer evenings were quite cold (68 degrees today) and rainy. We huddled in front of a fire for warm while watching one of his favorite programs. I'm thankful we had the opportunity to snuggle and play in our wonderful son's room. While we have been inside very little, Adam has stayed outside and played with friends and family that are not able to come inside. Even though he wasn't outside alone (he has an understanding,
