ArtCAMÂ .The National Cancer Institute (NCI) is initiating a cooperative group infrastructure study to evaluate the combination of new combination modalities in advanced non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) and squamous cell carcinoma of the lung. Fourteen institutions will participate and will form a study group consisting of a minimum of 100 eligible patients with advanced disease. The components of the study are: a) initial screening of eligibility, b) treatment planning including staging procedures, c) staging evaluation, d) evaluation of therapy, e) conduct of a review process, and f) preparation of the report and publication. Following group screening, a minimum of 100 patients will be identified who have advanced disease with performance status, sufficient organ function and a life expectancy of at least 6 months. A maximum of 10 patients per institution must be entered. Patients will be treated with a maximum of two therapies simultaneously. Separate protocols will be developed for each combination. The study for each combination will include a minimum of three phase II studies. The first phase II protocol will be followed by a second phase II if the results are favorable and the combination is indicated. The second phase II study will be followed by
