It is a fantasy action RPG (role-playing game) developed by Compile Heart, Inc., with a collaboration with FromSoftware. For more details, please visit: ©FromSoftware 2018Oil production could have significant impact on state economy Its name was and continues to be synonymous with oil and gas exploration, the drilling of wells and the production of oil and gas. An oil well being drilled in the 1920s. Photo contributed by: Photo Courtesy of Desert Research Institute But it turns out it had quite an impact on people and places way back when. The oil and gas industry was established in Nevada in the 19th century. It was a boom time. The first oil well was drilled just north of Reno in 1858. Reno was born in the boom. "Reno grew from a small town into a place that was very important, without the oil and gas companies, without the oil and gas companies," said Mark Steinhauer, a local historian. In 1875, the Nevada legislature passed legislation that set aside the Black Lake oil field. Nevada got its first hydrocarbon. With oil coming out of the ground, the first town, Reno, began to bloom. "There were almost 9,000 people in Reno in 1890," Steinhauer said. Vast downtown views in the 1890s. "A lot of people went broke," Steinhauer said. "They were making money and then they lost their money." The oil industry that had flourished for a few years, went bust. Nevada's oil industry had begun. "Reno was a boomtown. And when the boom went bust, the bust did not end on the streets of Reno," Steinhauer said. The confluence of these events have led to a major change for the Nevada economy. Reno remained a boomtown for a while but the population dropped as oil production moved east of Reno and north of Reno. "They went to Oklahoma to drill," Steinhauer
