Using javascript typeof with function to return a value in a cross browser way I'm looking for a cross browser way of returning one of the string values for the javascript typeof function: `function() { return typeof operator === 'undefined' }` Currently this returns "undefined" in Chrome but in some other browsers it returns something like "function". (Warning: I'm using the typeof operator here as it's handy for my needs). So, is there a way of using typeof that will return one of the string values for the function in the above example? I'd also like it to be cross browser compatible, so I'm looking to find a way that will not use other libraries such as underscore or anything like that. It would be good to avoid direct jquery or anything in this case. Thanks A: Operators don't have a type, they're just properties of operator. You can't have a property without a type, so typeof will give you a string. You could use `function() { return typeof operator === 'undefined'; }` But beware, with `typeof operator === 'undefined'` your `operator === operator` may not do the thing you want it to. They can behave wildly differently. Don't use it if you don't understand what it's doing. Instead, use `function() { return (operator === undefined); }` `tr> {!!`

Q: How to get the last modified time for each file in Linux via shell script? I want to set the last modified time of files on Linux to the current time when I copy the files to other machines. I can find out the file names using the below command: comm -12 all_last_modified_times.txt

How can I fix this problem? A: You're almost there. You just forgot to loop over the content of all_last_modified_times.txt. Also you don't need to sort, awk and redirect to save the last modification time for each line. comm -12 all_last_modified_times.txt

Or you can use Python and just remove the ":" comm -12
