Recently, a laser beam is emitted from a semiconductor laser as a light source of an optical recording and reproducing apparatus. A laser beam emitted from the semiconductor laser is converted to a parallel light beam by an objective lens. The objective lens is usually formed of a plastic lens and has a hemispherical reflector function at its surface. The hemispherical reflector and the objective lens are bonded together so that a laser beam is incident on an optical axis of the objective lens at an angle of about 5.degree..+-1.degree.. The hemispherical reflector is made of plastic material or glass material. A conventional lens-spacer is attached to the objective lens in a conventional optical head. Thus, the overall thickness of the objective lens is about 2.5 mm. A diameter of a plastic material is 10 to 20.mu.m, and the plastic material is anisotropic in shape. Therefore, in the plastic material, the direction of molecular flow is different in strength from the direction of the next molecular flow, and the plastic material is easily affected by external force. In the case of manufacturing the lens-spacer, the part for bonding the hemispherical reflector to the objective lens is easily broken.
