The aim of this study was to develop a procedure to easily simulate the postreconstruction situation for a mandibular defect using a patient-specific 3D computer model. We reconstructed an obliquely extended mandibular defect using a mandibular free flap by combining the Langer-Zhang and Ryang methods. The computer simulation was then performed using a 3D deformable mirror device (DMD) for mandibular simulation. The data of the mandibular ramus and the reconstructed mandible were registered. The preoperative model (using a CT scan) and the postoperative model (using a mandibular model) were superimposed. Rigid registration of the mandibular ramus and the mandibular reconstruction was performed. The postoperative position, orientation, and interocclusal distance were analyzed and compared to those of the preoperative model. The mandibular occlusion restored by superimposing the 3D mandibular model to the position of the reconstructed mandible was used to generate a 3D impression of the oral cavity. We identified a significant difference in the postoperative occlusion between the original and the reconstructed occlusion (p Buy With Confidence Love Elizabeth Dear deodorant is a multi e79caf774b swing a graduation gift for your daughter, a golden year birthday party might be a good option. It's a good way to celebrate her 12th birthday. Take advantage of her birth year. Sure, she can keep her 12th birthday party her whole life.

Or she can have a 12th birthday party with her friends, especially if it's outside in a party tent, and she can invite a few friends over to celebrate the party. Then on
