Surgical removal of an avascular necrotic epidermal inclusion cyst presenting with subcutaneous infection. Epidermal inclusion cysts are benign, slow-growing epidermal appendages. They can arise as a result of trauma to the skin or may originate in nonhair-bearing areas. They may occur in the central portion of a hair follicle, within the interfollicular epidermis, or subcutaneously. The formation of an epidermal inclusion cyst depends on the presence of an abnormally organized pilosebaceous unit. It can be associated with other disorders, and may be complicated by infection. We present the case of a 57-year-old man with bilateral, painful, inflamed subcutaneous nodules. Biopsy of a right nodule revealed an epidermal inclusion cyst. The patient had a history of alcohol abuse and diabetes. The diagnosis was made with histologic examination of a plaque-like lesion in the right submandibular region. The cyst was surgically removed, and histologic examination revealed an epidermal inclusion cyst. Although rare, epidermal inclusion cysts can be associated with other skin disorders and may be infected. Surgical removal is curative. Histopathologic examination is crucial to make the diagnosis.
