diphenyl ethers in two world heritage sites and adjacent areas in China. The concentrations of polybrominated diphenyl ethers (PBDEs) in water, sediment and grass in Shiquan, North Sea, and Huangdao, South Sea areas in China were determined to evaluate the background, current and potential pollution level of PBDEs in aquatic environment. The average concentrations of Σ PBDE (sum of the 19 congeners) in water, sediment and grass from Huangdao area were 1.01, 1.27 and 1.36ng/g dry weight, respectively. The mean concentrations of PBDEs were 0.28, 0.28 and 0.33ng/g dry weight in water, sediment and grass from Shiquan area, respectively. No significant seasonal variation of PBDEs were found in water and sediment from Huangdao area.
However, the concentrations of PBDEs in grass had significant seasonal variation. The results of spatial comparison showed that Shiquan area was much less polluted than Huangdao area. According to the source analysis, the main source of PBDEs in water from Huangdao area could be the local point source, but the sources of PBDEs in grass from Huangdao area were the forest source. Q: How to display a tab set on a xpage on a new open
