What's new:

- June 8th, 2012 San Francisco... where the past resembles today. Hey! Derrick and Josh are here for a chance to pick their member of WWE's main roster, a match between a "B-Man" and "The B-Man", and this week's highlights from the Boston fan Expo! Also, everyone is sick and tired of the John Cena and CM Punk name calling so Josh and Derrick hope that they won't hear any more of it when Rockie Mike and Todd discuss their Rock vs Cena and Punk 2.0 picks for the WWE. Joshua: Chris Jericho, a master of in ring psychology, is a near-immortal entity with the ability to pop up anytime, place or platform. His bizarro mic-switching routine has been a big part of his appeal to WWE fans since he was in WCW. I'm not sure if there has ever been a competition in recent memory where logic has been more completely and utterly lost than in this one. Derrick: And while Jericho has been a part of some questionable storylines, he has enough charisma to save any given match. That and the fact that the WWE fans adore him will probably result in Jericho's victory. I'm picking Jericho. Josh: The reason that "Time" in the title is very true in this case is that Chris Jericho is a legend. Yes, he may be wrapped up in a few dodgy backstage schemes and shoddy draft mistakes and-seriously I said almost all of that- but he was one of the most indelible faces in wrestling from 1997 to 2010. He was the face of a generation of fans growing up with 'it takes a village' Jericho as the guy who finally told Vince McMahon what we all liked and loathed. In the 4-year stretch from the original Hard Justice all the way to The Hell in a Cell, Jericho wrestled in 51 matches, including 13 singles matches with Undertaker and a dozen Mania matches in the same time period, and still has at least 13 people still up at night talking about those matches, 16 years later. In TNA, he was one half of a highly-successful tag team called The Highlanders, and was almost unbeatable in a singles bout as the hottest babyface in the company's history. And that's not even all. He was the first "Wrestling Observer
