Q: How to expose a set of nested beans in Spring? I have a situation where I have a bunch of beans that are defined in the Java source file, but for which I would like to avoid having a separate project which defines these source files, since I have no need of the Spring part of these files. Also, my IDE complains when I modify these files (because it can't keep track of changes to any of the Spring beans that may be defined in them), so I need the Spring source files to stay as they are (and remain available to whoever uses those files), but I need these sources to be ignored when the IDE is building the source files (so that the IDE can build and run without an issue). I have tried creating a Spring-specific source file (say named `__Spring.java`), but in `__Spring.java` I want to reference my non-Spring source file. What is the best way to do this?

A: The easiest solution is really to get rid of the Java classes. Make them plain POJOs rather than use a framework for object-orientation. Then there is only the configuration and injection problem left to solve. Autowire everything into a `@Configuration` class and use constructor injection. `@PostConstruct` life-cycle methods work great for finalizing things like setting up final variables/directories.

A: I have just found another solution that accomplishes what I'm looking for. I think Spring has another solution that would work for this type of situation, but I've yet to find it. Currently, I am building off of my solution, and I think it will work great. Background: In my project, I have an abstract base class called `StringTestingUtils` that has a static implementation of `verifyTestAvailable` for each set of tests in `my.jar`.

What is your favorite RPG Maker game? You can upload your own rom hacks, hacks that is. This guide will be a fair bit longer than my previous one, as I've put a lot more time into it. What are the license terms? The included artwork was made by me, and all rights belong to me. You should never post my artwork anywhere, or use it in any way. You can, however, use it for your own use (as long as it's for your own use only, of course). Any use for any kind of profit, will be strictly forbidden. Do not use the included software. As long as you are using only this pack, you are using your OWN software.

Do not upload the rom to any site. Do not translate my translation. It is absolutely my work, and I would not like others to take it credit. Do not resell the pack, or put the rom on a platform that requires you to pay. Do not use any of the content for any kind of profit, as the creator (me) won't be credited, and I would be very annoyed by such practices. Use to make your own game, not to patch a ROM hack game, they are totally different. If you want to make a Hack, I suggest you use a source code editor that allow you to make a rom hack without modifying the game, of course you can use C++ or Java. Review:
