No More Cannon Fire is a closed beta of the latest in the RTS genre, and it's being developed for the PlayStation 3. With intense graphics and a fairly easy learning curve, it's a simple game to get hooked on at first. But it's a pleasant enough game to have fun and waste your time on. The original story was told in the famous book "Ordeal at Pallaola", but for those who have yet to experience this story, here is a quick summary. Once upon a time, a horrible princess named O'okuraka hits the West Coast of North America. She is not so bad though – you see, she has gone mad and wants to marry the Sun or whatever pops his head out of the sky at the end of the day. As awful as this sounds, it's not so bad. A wise neighbouring king named Toneralveruawa pulls a few strings and sends mercenaries to rescue the princess. They arrive and our heroes begin to lead a strike team to get the princess to safety and then back to North America – all the while avoiding the sun bombs falling from the sky and the oceans of fire into the sea. Throughout the story are many different objectives and missions. The main character is an American and rules what remained of the United States after the nightmare with her husband and other miscreants. The story of this universe is told in journals that disappear from the audience after completing the mission. Additionally, the team of 3-4 heroes can always return to help a fellow hero if he calls and will never be spammed either. You are the team captain, you can select 4 squad members – each with their own appearance and strength. The game is easy at first but too many people don't have fun just for the gameplay. Game revolves around the thinking that you have to clear each site to get to the next. You'll have to use your limited movement to hit your enemies and then all you have to worry about is a bit of attack damage. You can move all over the place through forests, around the ocean and there is an excellent sky marshal view where you can work out where your team is and see how many enemies you've managed to kill. If you're going from site to site you can always recruit a new hero with a 100 gold bonus to bring more firepower. If you get the idea from the title that the
