I tried to uninstall this program from Windows 8 and I had to explain to the Windows store what is wrong. They advised me to uninstall it manually. It is clear that it does not have a uninstall mechanism. Would have preferred this if you have just a few (1-2) pictures to burn in an autorun, but it should be possible to update the.exe after the disc is released. Also when you will be creating a disc with the application all the time, you want the application to be runnable from the autorun menu. Which was not so with this exe and I got a lot of errors during the burning process. Summary: Installing an application from a autorun disc, should be as easy as installing an application from an internet site.
