leading supermarkets in New South Wales says it has recently received letters from the NSW government that claim it has refused to comply with the law governing the classification of cheeses under the New South Wales Food Act 2009. Chef's Manufacturers said it has been claiming since December last year that it should have been provided with written proof from the government that the cheese was an 'other food' under the Food Act. The company argues that this classification would have made its cheese products eligible for a duty-free price on importation. "The company believes that the NSW Government has no clear evidence to support their claim, and that the letter must be considered open to misinterpretation," the company said.
