Starting with the empty canvas When you open Photoshop, you see a blank slate or canvas onto which you can place images. The empty canvas provides the most basic interface for creating and manipulating images. The placement of your image files on the canvas is controlled by the application's File Handling module. To create and edit images, you need to open either a raster-based image file or a file of vector graphics. You can open the file into the Canvas workspace of Photoshop CS6, but you can also save the file to the hard drive, and then open it elsewhere later. Think of a canvas as a window into your image file. You use the image within the window. Depending on the type of image you create, you place commands on a canvas, such as special effects and then save the file with a different name. When you use special effects such as layer styles and gradients, the canvas tools enable you to modify certain areas only when they're selected. For example, you can change the fill color of the layer only when the color box is checked on the Layers panel. After you complete your work, you close the image and use the Share panel to share the modified image through social media. If you open an image in Photoshop, you see the following display: On the left side of the window you see the Layer panel, which is used for creating and editing individual layers within the image. The image is displayed on the right side of the window.

Approach to Photoshop Themes

Photoshop CS6 has a new feature that can automatically categorize your images based on light and color. It builds a theme based on the images in your library and builds tags. You can also use this feature to categorize images or tags based on a specific theme. With this feature, you can also set up a preset style guide or template for your new images, so that you can simply select your new files and the theme works with those files. This feature can also be used to create a “look” for your images, like a retro look for your images, by applying multiple color levels. You can also use the same interface to easily edit your themes and keep a style guide that you can use for new projects as they are added. Also, the idea is that you can easily apply preset layers to new images to create a style that you can use as a base. It's a great way to have a base to start from. Then, you can edit the colors and add your own creativity to the styling of the new project.

of the Holy See from 1502 to 1509. He was elected as Bishop of Siponto on 20 December 1513, resigning the see in 1516. Pope Julius II then offered the see of Remate to him on 16 May 1514, but Berard declined. Berard later had a conflict with the Emperor. In 1519 when the pope excommunicated some Hungarian archbishops for supporting King Ferdinand of Hungary, the Emperor ordered the Bishop of Urbino to preach against the Pope. Berard is recorded as saying "I am the bishop of Siponto, and I have obtained from the Emperor the power to preach against the pope". The Catholic Hagiography by Alexander Strugnell records the Emperor as threatening the pope with excommunication, according to which the Pope would be removed from the Pontificate. However, this is not found in the contemporary printed works, in which Berard is still very humble and respectful to the papal See. After the death of Pope Leo X in 1521, his brother Giulio de' Medici was elected pope under the name of Pope Clement VII. On 10 June 1522 the German emperor and the Hungarian King Ferdinand summoned Berard to Rome, and wrote to the bishop of Bologna that he was "immediately to return to Rome with the consent of the same bishop". The Pope rejected his views, and Berard was forced to again go to Germany and Hungary, but he returned to Italy within the Pope's lifetime. In 1525 Pope Clement demanded Berard to submit the episcopal residence in Siponto to local justice, and ordered him to join the Holy League. The bishop refused, and on 3 May 1525 the Emperor issued an order to arrest the bishop of Siponto. The bishop fled to Germany, and Pope Clement declared Berard excommunicated, but he was released by the Emperor. The Bishop then went to Spain, but Pope Clement summoned him in Rome again in 1528. After holding the Lateran Consistory he again went to Germany, and he entered into negotiations to obtain the bishopric of Remate. In the marriage contract between King Ferdinand I and Queen Isabella of Spain, signed on 10 August 1529 in Valladolid, they agreed that the bishopric of Siponto was to be transferred to the King and would revert to the Church if the Pope refused to transfer the see to Ferdinand. The agreement was witnessed by Pope Clement and the bishops of Gubbio,
