Since antibiotic sensitivity profiles of bacteria change in the presence of the gastrointestinal (GI) tract, it is important to know how permeability to antibiotics varies within the GI tract. We measured in vivo permeability of cephalixin to the GI tract of nonfasted mice. Cephalixin (3.0 mg/kg) was given orally, and plasma cephalixin concentrations were measured over time. Permeability of cephalixin from the pylorus to the cecum was linear ($r = 0.94$, slope = 0.086) and the half-life of cephalixin in the cecum was 0.72 h. A nonlinear relationship was found between cephalixin concentration in blood and the area under the blood concentration-time curve (AUC) ($r = -0.59$). Antibiotic clearance by the liver was not detected. These data indicate that cephalixin appears to be better absorbed from the small intestine than from the pylorus and that cephalixin is a poor substrate for active efflux by the multidrug resistance (MDR) system. This in vivo mouse model is a reasonable way to study in vivo bacterial sensitivity to cephalixin. 154 N.W.2d 518 (1967) 185 Neb. 834 STATE of Nebraska, Appellee, v. J. Louis NEY, Appellant.
