peroxidation in rat brain under conditions of chronic-stress]. Rats were subjected to immobilization during 3 weeks, i.e. at 2 h a day. There were observed metabolic changes in the antioxidant system in the brain tissue of the stressed rats. A decrease in antioxidant defence (SOD and CAT) was seen in the brain mitochondria and microsomes. There was an increase in lipid peroxidation level and indices of oxidative injury of lipids (the thiobarbituric acid reactive substances content, which was normalized by 3-week immobilization). It was assumed that an elevation of stress was responsible for the metabolic changes in the antioxidant system in the rat brain.Q: How to install additional
