Free Elden Ring

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a filter, and more particularly, to a filter with a combination of a capacitive and an inductive element for use in RF applications. 2. Description of the Prior Art With the recent developments of wireless communication technologies, it has been common in recent years to replace wire-based communication infrastructures with wireless communication infrastructures in various fields, such as in vehicle-based communication systems. As a result, the development of filter components to be used in these infrastructures is becoming increasingly important. A typical conventional filter employed in an RF application includes a combination of capacitive and inductive components. In such a conventional filter, capacitors can be used to allow signals of relatively low frequencies to pass through a filter at relatively high loss, while inductors can be used to allow signals of relatively high frequencies to pass through a filter at relatively low loss. The combination of capacitors and inductors, therefore, effectively make it possible to selectively adjust the attenuation of high frequencies or low frequencies. However, the construction of the conventional filter is not only rather complicated but also rather difficult to maintain. In order to achieve a desired attenuation value, there must be corresponding capacitors and inductors. This gives rise to compatibility problems between the capacitors and the inductors. Furthermore, high-frequency impedance matching must be performed between the capacitors and the inductors. The compatibility problems and high-frequency impedance matching not only complicate the fabrication processes of the conventional filter but also increase the fabrication cost. With the development of wireless communication technologies, it is desirable in the art to develop a filter that can be employed in RF applications which is simple in structure and low in cost. It is therefore an object of the present invention to provide a filter with a combination of a capacitive and an inductive element that is simple in structure and low in cost. In accordance with the present invention, there is provided a filter comprising a combination of an inductive element and a capacitor. The inductive element comprises a first inductive element, a second inductive element and a connector. The first inductive element is arranged in close proximity to a ground. The second inductive element has a length greater than that of the first inductive element. The first and second inductive elements are connected to each other at one end and to the connector at another end. The connector connects the first and second inductive elements to each other, and preferably is
