Temporal lobe damage has long been associated with visual processing deficits. Several investigations have examined whether epileptic seizures can affect the perception of simple static visual cues. The current study examined the visual detection of biological motion in four groups of subjects: individuals with epilepsy who had a variety of seizure types (complex partial seizures (n = 24), complex mixed seizures (n = 24), generalised seizures (n = 17)) and controls (n = 21). The Biological Motion Tasks, a test of biological motion perception from videos, were administered to the four groups of subjects. Total performance time was significantly prolonged in each of the epileptic groups compared with controls. Subjects with complex partial seizures performed worse than the other three groups on both the human and the nonhuman task. A sub-analysis of performance on the human biological motion task revealed that the individuals with mixed seizures performed better than the control and the complex partial seizure groups. This exploratory study indicates that temporal lobe epileptic patients with a variety of seizure types display impairments in biological motion perception. It is unclear whether these deficits are attributed to a primary visual perception disorder or an impairment in associative processing.#region License // Copyright (c) 2013, ClearCanvas Inc. // All rights reserved. // // This file is part of the ClearCanvas RIS/PACS open source project. // // The ClearCanvas RIS/PACS open source project is free software: you can // redistribute it and/or modify it under the terms of the GNU General Public // License as published by the Free Software Foundation, either version 3 of the // License, or (at your option) any later version. // // The ClearCanvas RIS/PACS open source project is distributed in the hope that it // will be useful, but WITHOUT ANY WARRANTY; without even the implied warranty of // MERCHANTABILITY or FITNESS FOR A PARTICULAR PURPOSE.
