vivo and in vitro effects of isolated surfactants on the surface tension of pulmonary fluid. Surfactant-deficient dogs were tracheally aspirated, and surfactant was isolated from alveolar lavage and concentrated by high-speed centrifugation. The ability of the purer preparation to reduce surface tension was tested in vitro and compared with that of preparations of crude lung surfactant and to surfactant preparations from lavage obtained from dogs treated with one of three different surfactants.

In vitro, the less pure preparations produced significantly higher surface tensions than the purer preparations. In vivo, the less pure preparations significantly lowered surface tension at both air-liquid interfaces. The changes in surface tension were accompanied by changes in compliance. The purer preparations did not change compliance, and their in vitro data were in agreement with those of the purer in vivo preparations. The results indicate that surface tension measurements alone may not provide information sufficient to differentiate between surfactant preparations.

Altus (operetta)
Altus (Italian: Altro) is an operetta by Giacomo Puccini to an Italian libretto by Edmondo de Amicis, which is loosely based on, and first performed in March 1897. Performance history Altus was given its US premiere by Jerome H. Griswold's Opera Company in San Francisco in December 1901.

The piece had a short run, but the composer conducted the US premiere of his opera Gianni Schicchi in April 1903. Roles Synopsis Act 1 A few moments after her father's funeral, a peasant-woman stands in the doorway of his house and says to her husband: "I believe I heard my father's voice." While the peasants, who know nothing of the woman's absurd claim, are discussing the very recent occurrence in the house, the young girl Anna, who knows nothing of the woman, who in fact is the servant, Giuletta, appears in the doorway. The husband has just had a dream in which she promised him
