Deposits with coin: 10 Mon, 25 May 2015 18:38:26. Kingdoms of Amalur: Reckoning v1.0.0.2 Trainer. The fine details of this item: fixation of the lateral malleolus in complex fractures of the lateral malleolus and the ankle joint]. We investigated the results of rigid fixation of the lateral malleolus in complex fractures of the lateral malleolus and the ankle joint in a retrospective study. 21 of a series of 31 fractures of the lateral malleolus with combined injuries of the ankle were fixed with an intramedullary nailing and the excision of the fibula alone (lateral malleolus and the calcaneus). 4 patients with ankle fractures only and 11 patients with fractures of the lateral malleolus only were included in the study. Follow-up ranged from 17 to 49 months. To gain the maximum benefits from the fusion of the joint, we combined the use of a 1.7 mm blade plate and a dorsal locking plate. The average surgical time was 5 hours. The time in the intensive care unit was an average of 2.2 days. The fusion rate after 6 months was 14 of 15 (93%). There were no cases of nonunion or infections. The average time to union of those without fracture of the ankle was 28 weeks. The average range of ankle movement in the patients without an osseous union was - 25 degrees plantar flexion and 30 degrees dorsiflexion. The ankle movement in the group with an osseous union was from 0 degrees plantar flexion to 0 degrees dorsiflexion. In the group without an osseous union, the average AOFAS score was 79 points and in the group with an osseous union, the average AOFAS score was 94 points. One patient in the group without an osseous union had a hypertrophic nonunion which healed after treatment with corticosteroids. We recommend rigid fixation with an intramedullary nailing and a 1.7 mm blade plate and a dorsal locking plate for the treatment of complex fractures of the lateral malleolus and the ankle joint and we do not recommend treating those without osseous union with ar
