A: I solved the problem. The problem occurs when you try to use the last cell of the sheet. UNCARVILLE, Ala. — To understand just how well Thomas and De'Andre Ware have been doing, you have to go back to the days when they began as high school basketball standouts and their college dreams were laid out in front of them. The answer could be found at the top of the St. Frances Academy boys basketball team's log sheet. "I don't know," De'Andre Ware said with a shy smile. "I don't even remember." Wednesday, after Thomas Ware's game-winning shot lifted the Saints to a 54-48 victory over Rivals.com's No. 1 team in the country, St. Frances, it was an incident of one of the few times the friend-turned-enemy combination hasn't been forced to work off its animosity. On Christmas Day 2009, De'Andre Ware burst into the room where Thomas Ware's sister, Tia Ware, was sitting, opened a Bible and informed her brother he would not be allowed to play basketball anymore. De'Andre then climbed on the chair and shouted at his brother: "You'll never play basketball in this house." "He was relentless," Tia Ware said. "It was overwhelming." What started as a war of words, abruptly ended. For three years, De'Andre Ware has been the only brother on the court, able to play ball with the likes of Jermaine Lawrence, Andrew White and Larnelle Moates. But as the Saints found themselves ranked No. 9 in the country during the preseason, a rematch with De'Andre Ware and Notre Dame Prep began to loom in the country's most important rivalry. Now they would meet once again, and the younger Ware brother will have his chance to out-duel his little brother. "I'm as confident as I can be because I know that he's no longer trying to stop my game," De'Andre Ware said. "He's no longer the enemy. We're teammates. He just wants me to play basketball the way I want to play basketball." The second game of this latest meeting was not nearly as intense as the first. No words were exchanged. De'Andre Ware played defense for most of the time, and his younger brother watched from the bench. "He was letting Thomas know that he wasn't going to
