NLGEU president Robert Fox called the province's actions "an absolute disgrace." "We don't operate in a country or a province where people can just walk away and be so cavalier with other people's hard-earned tax dollars," he said. Fox said the union has been involved in negotiations on various agreements with the government for about four years. Earlier this year, the union and the province reached an initial deal that included a pay increase. But Fox said Wednesday the province has taken a "completely different tack" in the new year with the negotiations. "There's been a lot of backroom dealing, a lot of backroom dealing going on," he said. "Once you cross that line, there's absolutely no reason to negotiate anymore — you've crossed the line. And there are some processes within the union where we've taken a different tack and we'll continue to do that." Fox said there's no time table for when the union will take the issue to court.
