We've worked with the Center for Collaborative Consumption at Harvard's Berkman Center and others to use digital tools to measure the cost of over 1,000 shares of iPods. Since we know the value of the cost and what it pays for, we get to set the price of those 5,000 shares. We asked eBay and Amazon each to sell 1,000 shares of a specially branded iPod. The shares went to 5,000 people who signed up to receive them in their eBay and Amazon accounts. Before selling, iPods were shipped to eBay and Amazon sellers, with a customized, branded iPod inside. We then used digital "iPods" with a trading platform to exchange the special iPods for a new set of regular Apple iPods. We asked each person in the database to keep track of the cost of each iPod from the value of the donation (i
